Prevention or Treatment by 2025

This past February, the National Institute of Health (NIH) hosted the Alzheimer’s Disease Research Summit 2015: Path to Treatment and Prevention. This is the second such summit in the last three years where leading representatives from governments, academia, industry and non-profit entities from around the world gather to measure progress toward a determinedly bold goal: “Prevent and Treat Alzheimer’s Disease by 2025.”

The nearly 110 year quest to cure or prevent Alzheimer’s disease and related dementias (ADRD) represents a history of deep anguish and frustration. Progress has come in fits and starts, but never fast or soon enough for those living with ADRD. Thus, the 2025 target date is momentous because it signals an unprecedented optimism and is relatively near.

At present, there are over 400 experimental pharmaceutical treatments underway in over 1,500 clinical trials. The promise of a cure or prevention does not rest on any one particular drug or trial at the moment. Instead, it is the unparalleled focus on global collaboration that promises to usher in a breakthrough within the decade.

It is a peculiarity of Alzheimer’s Disease and related dementias (ADRD) that it is at once a devastatingly personal tragedy and a global emergency. Every nation, city, town and extended family on the planet is touched by ADRD. Individual families receiving a diagnosis of ADRD quickly realize that coming to terms with the disease necessitates the formulation of a plan for living: caregiving, support and finances are not problems that solve themselves. Until now, governments, industry, academia and society as a whole have been slower in recognizing the need to develop a coordinated plan of attack in the face of a disease that knows no borders. Forty-four million people worldwide are living with ADRD. A global health crisis calls for a global response.

The United States Senate’s Report of the Special Committee on Aging puts an emphasis on the need for global collaboration in researching ADRD. The European Union and

Far Flung Adventures of Education Specialists

Recently, Education Specialists Kim Jung and Jane Haar gathered their assortment of teaching materials and headed out the door for just another day of work. An 800-mile round trip commute might seem daunting to some, but the Anchorage to Bethel jaunt is not particularly unusual in an Education Department that serves the needs of the entire state of Alaska. Alzheimer’s disease and related dementias (ADRD) effect everyone; it is not restricted to major population centers. In fact, Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska staff saw to it that our services were delivered in 144 Alaska communities in the last year.

Nearly all interactions with Jane and Kim involve a healthy dose of laughter and fun. In a nod to the Flintstones, Jane frequently refers to Kim as “Bam! Bam!” – an all-purpose compliment that translates as: “Once again Ms. Jung, you’ve nailed it!” Kim is not lacking in her own short hand for Jane. There is no higher praise from a berry picker like Kim than: “Juicy!”

Greetings,

The bright lights of the Academy Awards are usually focused on celebrity and glamour, but for a moment actress Juliane Moore’s poignant declaration took center stage before a worldwide audience of 43 million. Upon winning an Oscar this past February for her insightful depiction of a woman living with early onset Alzheimer’s, Moore had this to say: “I am thrilled that we were able to hopefully shine a light on Alzheimer’s disease. So many people with this disease feel isolated and marginalized. One of the wonderful things about movies is that they can make us feel seen and not alone. People with Alzheimer’s disease deserve to be seen so that we can find a cure.” This statement goes to the very heart of our mission at Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska.

Worldwide, over 44 million people are living with Alzheimer’s Disease and Related Dementias (ADRD). Five million Americans are living with ADRD, and of that number more than 8,000 are Alaskans. For the vast Alaskan community of caregivers, professionals, family members and loved ones affected by the disease, the reality of dementia is seen and experienced every moment of every day. But awareness among the rest of the population is lagging, and crucially, there is an inextricable link between creating a greater public awareness, improving the lives of those with ADRD and eventually finding a cure for the disease.

One of the recent ways we are raising awareness in Alaska is the development of the first ever strategic plan titled: Alaska’s Roadmap to Address Alzheimer’s Disease and Related Dementias. This plan was developed over a 3 year process by a statewide group of leaders of senior service providers, advocates and government representatives. The purpose of the Roadmap is to understand the current impact of ADRD in Alaska and to develop a comprehensive set of goals and strategies to improve the quality of life for those affected by ADRD for the next five to ten years. A key component of the plan is the promotion of public awareness and the opportunity for public education about ADRD. I invite you all to read or download a copy of the Roadmap from our website at AlzAlaska.org. - and if you are interested in helping implement the strategies, please let me know.

We are especially looking forward to creating awareness with your 11th annual walk: Amblin’ for Alzheimer’s. We invite you to join us on May 9th for this truly great cause and fund-raising celebration. This year’s walk is taking place at a new venue, the Anchorage Golf Course on O’Malley Road. Amblin’ offers a unique opportunity to celebrate our community, meet others facing similar challenges and to learn more about Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska. I hope to see you there.

Sincerely,

Karl Garber
Executive Director
the U.S. have established entities that share both biomedical information and help target projects that would benefit from greater research coordination and grant funding.

As of today, more than twenty countries have formulated their own national plans in response to Alzheimer’s disease. In 2012, the United States Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) put forth its National Plan to Address Alzheimer’s Disease and among the enumerated goals was the headline grabbing target date: To Prevent and Effectively Treat Alzheimer’s Disease by 2025.

In December of 2013 the nations of the G8 Conference declared themselves in alliance with the U.S. National Plan’s target date of 2025. The urgency of a ticking clock has galvanized a global effort to hasten if not a cure, the prevention and treatment of ADRD within the decade. A commitment to global coordination in the pursuit of the 2025 goal demands a tight accounting of milestones made, missed or mistaken.

Lofty goals require specific strategies and a dogged determination to execute these strategies. It is for this reason that a National Plan Milestone Workgroup revisits, assesses and revises the National Plan every few years. They issued this statement going into the 2015 summit: “Despite significant challenges associated with AD research, the scientific community remains more optimistic than ever about the potential success of a focused National Plan,” but, they went on to say, “Inadequate funding remains the single most important impediment to progress in achieving the research goal of the National Plan.”

According to HHS, these are the necessary strategies to make the “2025” goal a reality:

- Identify research priorities and milestones;
- Expand research aimed at preventing and treating AD;
- Accelerate efforts to identify early and presymptomatic stages of AD;
- Coordinate research with international public and private entities.
- Facilitate the translation of findings into medical practice and public health programs.

NIH Director Fancis Collins opened the summit with these words: “Our charge for this meeting is to re dedicate ourselves to this critically important work and to identify the highest priorities for biomedical research on Alzheimer’s disease and related conditions.”

At the moment, the highest priorities include: earlier diagnostic methods, earlier treatment, greater sharing of research data, more genetic samples from ADRD affected families, greater experimentation with drug combinations, more thorough investigations into lifestyle factors that contribute to ADRD and the use of “big data” that might hint at underlying causal factors.

By its very nature this list is not all inclusive and is fast evolving. Today, the millions of loved ones, caregivers and those living with ADRD don’t have the luxury of thinking in terms of decades. But it seems clear that these are the very individuals who are making the greatest contribution toward the global effort to spare future generations the anguish and cost that comes with ADRD.
Bam! Bam! and Juicy took their show on the road to Bethel on March 20 and 21. The two specialists presented a Dementia Care Workshop to caregivers and led the uniquely interactive Virtual Dementia Tour* for interested Bethel community residents.

The Virtual Dementia Tour involves wearing headphones, glasses, gloves and special inserts for footwear that simulate the hearing, sight, touch, balance and comprehension issues that frustrate so many individuals living with dementia. More than twenty people from Bethel came away with a greater appreciation for the obstacles that face those living with ADRD.

The Virtual Dementia Tour can be a harrowing experience for many, but the primary impact is increased empathy and an understanding of the importance of compassion in caring for our frail elders.

In conducting the Dementia Workshop Jane and Kim had the opportunity to consult closely with other individuals whose lives are touched by ADRD. These prospective clients and their families learned more about ADRD and effective caregiving and most importantly were left with a “higher level of hopefulness,” according to Jane. Kim grew up in Bethel. It is no exaggeration to say that she knows almost everyone in town – more than a few old friends credited her with bringing in the unseasonably warm and sunny weather with her.

According to Jane, Kim is welcomed like the “Homecoming Queen” whenever they find themselves in Bethel. And Kim’s enthusiasm in returning to Bethel and sharing her favorite places is unmatched. A trip to what is obviously Bethel’s most authentic Greek Restaurant had to be postponed this trip until the proprietor Dmitri returns from Greece. But there was no shortage of good food or company as the two were able to enjoy fish chowder and a smoked fish dinner with Kim’s extended family.

As is always the case on the YK Delta, thoughts turned to the Kuskokwim River where Kim’s brother pointed out a few snowmachiners loading their sleds chock full of logs – fuel for their steam baths. It is a 200 mile round trip snowmachine ride from Kipnuk to Bethel, a small matter when it comes to improving the quality of life for our loved ones.

The Virtual Dementia Tour is a scientifically proven method of building a greater understanding of dementia through the use of patented sensory tools and instruction. Created by P.K. Beville, M.S., an award-winning geriatric specialist and founder of Second Wind Dreams. Contact any Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska office to set up a Virtual Dementia Tour in your area.
In-Home Services caregiver Nancy Hendrickson was nominated by Lindy Flowers for the Alaska Alliance for Direct Service Careers (AADSC) Outstanding Direct Service Professional of the Year Award. There are five categories for which AADSC accepts the nominations:

- People with Traumatic Brain Injuries
- People with Severe Mental Illness
- People with Alzheimer’s Disease and Other Age-Related Dementia/Elder Care
- People in Treatment for Chronic Alcoholism/Substance Abuse
- People with Developmental Disabilities

Nancy was selected as the winner of the People with Alzheimer’s Disease and Other Age-Related Dementia/Elder Care category. Nancy has been an employee with Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska for 16 years, and is one of the employees who we know can be depended upon to provide excellent quality care for our clients.

Nancy will receive her award during the Full Lives Conference which will be held in Anchorage on April 16th and 17th. She will also receive a check for $1,000, free registration to attend the two day conference, and mileage reimbursement for her travel.

Thank you Nancy for all of your hard work and dedication to your clients, their caregivers and our agency. You are appreciated. Congratulations!

Our community comes together to provide support in many forms. Sometimes it is time and talent. Other times its gifts of financial and material goods. We would like to thank and Alaska Pacific University Pipe Band, Apricot Lane Boutique and Alaska Association of Health Underwriters for their efforts to raise awareness and special contributions that clearly show their dedication to Alaska’s frail seniors and to the programs and services of the Alzheimer’s Resource of Alaska. Thank you.

Angela Anderson accepts a generous donation from Jason Gootee, Executive Director Alaska Association of Health Underwriters (AAHU).
Too often, Alaskan seniors are forced to choose between groceries and medications, or groceries and incontinence supplies - necessities all. Despite the expertise of our staff in securing diverse funding that meets the needs of our seniors, many items and services fall into gap areas that other programs, grants and insurance cannot meet.

By joining our 11th annual Amblin’ for Alzheimer’s, you are helping raise funds that support our seniors and family caregiver needs. Your participation ensures the dignity and quality of life for our Alaskan seniors.
